

James Barbour

James Barbour is Director, Policy Leadership, at the Institute of Chartered Accountants of Scotland (ICAS), where he oversees the work on various areas including Audit and Assurance, Ethics, and Financial Reporting. He is also responsible for the ICAS Ethics Board and is the lead on all matters connected with The Power of One initiative. Mr. Barbour qualified as a CA in 1996 and worked in general practice (primarily audit) with one of Scotland's largest independent firms before joining ICAS in 1999.

Mr. Barbour is a member of Accountancy Europe (AE)'s Audit and Assurance Policy Group, Professional Ethics and Competencies Working Group, and is the ICAS representative at the AE Members' Assembly. He is a member of the UK Government's audit stakeholder group. He is the technical adviser to the CCAB International Ethics Standards Board for Accountants board member and the technical adviser on ethics to the Global Accounting Alliance (GAA).

Mr. Barbour regularly represents ICAS at meetings with standard-setting bodies, government bodies, regulators, and others concerning various business and technical issues, such as audit and assurance, corporate reporting, and ethics. He is also an Honorary Professor in the Adam Smith Business School at the University of Glasgow.
